EXHIBIT A SCOPE OF WORK

Willi McFarland, MD, PhD

Dr. McFarland is Director of HIV/AIDS Statistics and Epidemiology at the San Francisco Department of Public Health and Associate Professor in the Department of Epidemiology and Biostatistics at UCSF. He received an undergraduate degree from Stanford University and an MPH and MD from Tulane School of Medicine. Dr. McFarland conducts multiple studies to assess the burden of AIDS and the leading edge of HIV transmission in diverse communities at risk in San Francisco. Research projects range from the use of HIV and AIDS case reporting data to identify care and prevention disparities, HIV prevalence and incidence studies, and behavioral surveys. For I-TAPS, Dr. McFarland serves as a member of our core teaching faculty and primary mentor to trainees in the Mentoring Skills Training Program, the Scientific Manuscript Writing Program, and the Grant Writing Program. He coordinates training and technical assistance activities for scholars from all regions from which our ITAPS scholars come, including sub-Saharan Africa, Eastern Europe, Latin America, Southeast and Central Asia. Areas of focus include prevention intervention research, HIV/AIDS/STI surveillance, and prevention program monitoring and evaluation. He assists in the preparation of abstracts and presentations for international and regional AIDS conferences, in the writing of scientific manuscripts, provides report-backs from scientific conferences, and gives regional updates on HIV/AIDS in low- and middle-income countries. Additionally, he helps to plan and implement in-country scientific writing workshops initiated by our ITAPS mentors-in-training at their home institutions and/or regions. Dr. McFarland will dedicate 10% of his efforts to GHS International Training Program 2020-2021.
