New Communities Design

- Bandar Shapour New Community Master Plan, Bandar Shapour, Iran
- Dahua Xixi Scenery Community Master Plan, Hangzhou, China
- Hanoi New Town Master Plan, Hanoi, Vietnam
Hanoi New Town is planned for a population of 750,000 people on 7,580 hectares of land surrounding Van Trih Lake and the creeks that are part of Hanoi's natural water system. The site is part of the Red River's flood plain; Hanoi New Town will be built on fill to raise the land above the flood plain. The lake and new flood control measures are designed to become open space and recreational amenities for the new community while also preserving sustainable agriculture and historic villages as part of the setting.
- Jondi Shahpour New Community Master Plan, Ahwaz, Iran
- Saigon South Master Plan, Ho Chi Minh City, Vietnam
Saigon South is a 6,500-acre expansion of Ho Chi Minh City, Vietnam. The Master Plan establishes a framework for development that combines commercial, residential, cultural, recreational, and other uses in a series of linked urban districts. In close proximity south of the historic core and west of the City's new deepwater port Saigon South will accommodate a population of 1.0 million people. Conceived from the beginning as a sustainable development project Saigon South is planned as a transit-based, pedestrian-oriented development. By maintaining and restoring canals and waterways, the Plan will significantly improve regional water quality in and around the City. By concentrating new development in a clearly delineated area, it will both preserve the historic City and the agricultural greenbelt that surrounds it. Saigon South is the largest mastered planned project under construction in Vietnam. The Saigon South Master Plan has won a Progressive Architecture and AIA Urban Design Honor Award.

The redevelopment study assesses 3,000 acres of riverfront property along the San Antonio River in the heart of this city's downtown. The study area encompassed the San Antonio central business district, residential neighborhoods of various economic and social levels, and a prominent urban recreational area. The study was prepared for a committee of six public agencies; working with this complex client group, priorities for growth guidelines and public investment policies were established. The guidelines were designed to stimulate patterns of development that would revitalize San Antonio's downtown and improve the environmental quality of the river and the riverfront. The award-winning plan became a model for urban waterfront planning and transformed a declining inner city into a thriving downtown

- Las Colinas Urban Center Master Plan, Irving, TX

The Las Colinas Urban Center in Irving, Texas is the focal point of the 960-acre Las Colinas new town development that surrounds the 125-acre Lake Carolyn. Located at the southern entrance to Las Colinas, the Urban Center is a unique waterfront urban environment that incorporates commercial office uses, mid and high-rise residential uses and retail facilities. The integrated mix of uses has attracted national attention. Although typical urban centers are designed with densities similar to a downtown area, this design emphasizes open space, landscaped medians, waterways and other amenities to create an aesthetic atmosphere unique to most central business districts. The original master plan was redesigned to achieve higher densities, a better integrated mix of uses and a higher degree of urbanity that are the signatures of successful downtowns. Integrated transportation concepts were studied to ensure that the densified urban center will remain highly accessible.

- Valley Ranch Master Plan, Irving, TX

The Valley Ranch, located near the Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport, is a 2,400-acre mixed-use community with low and medium density housing, office and retail. The Master Plan contains a series of strategies that emphasize the distinctive landforms of the site; a range of low, mesquite covered hills to the west and a levee along the Elm Fork of the Trinity River to the east. A gently curving parkway defines the natural, valley-like central portion of Valley Ranch. A network of roads, landscaped waterways and canals subdivides the site so that all development parcels have access to a community-wide open space system. Higher density housing and neighborhood facilities are located at the intersections of roads and waterways to increase accessibility. Pedestrian walkway system and park spaces were created at the canal edges to maximize green and open space. The plan set a new standard for site sensitive planning and neighborhood design for suburban development in the Dallas MetroPlex. The landscape, pedestrian way and streetscape design was designed by JJR Ann Arbor.

- Villages of Bear Creek Master Plan, Euless, TX
The Villages of Bear Creek is a 700-acre site located in a rapidly developing area within the city of Euless, Texas. The Villages of Bear Creek is situated on land that is rich in natural features. The topography is that of rolling hills, with numerous creeks, extensive meadows, wide flood plains, and dense oak and mesquite forests. The primary design concept for the Villages of Bear Creek introduces a north-south road that ties together the many housing and commercial environments into a single and uniquely identifiable residential community. With the underlying idea of creating a memorable parkway this road is curvilinear and narrow, and has been designed to preserve the feeling of existing topography, trees and water features of the site. Along its entire length, the parkway landscape and lighting treatment are designed to be informal and park-like. Bordering the parkway are jogging trails and walkways that lead to larger open spaces and recreation facilities located in the flood plain of the two creeks that pass through the site and connect the Villages to the larger community. The landscape implementation plan and streetscape design was designed by JJR Ann Arbor.
