Amendments to Current Law

It is the intent and purpose of the City to preserve the supply of public housing in the City, prevent or minimize the hardship associated with the displacement and relocation of public housing tenants as a result of a public housing development project, and protect the rights of public housing tenants to: (i) maintain their sense of community, (ii) return to revitalized and fully comparable dwelling units upon completion of a public housing development project, and to (iii) provide independent, third-party oversight of relocation appeals associated with public housing redevelopment. This Ordinance proposes to amend current law to provide such protections. The Ordinance establishes, amongst other things:

- (i) an administrative framework and timeline for the relocation planning process for public housing development projects that obtain financial assistance from the City;
- (ii) the right of all current public housing tenants to return to any new development constructed in connection with a public housing development project, provided they have not been evicted from public housing; and
- (iii) for all current public housing tenants being relocated from any public housing development project that receives financial assistance from the City, the right to have their relocation claims heard by the San Francisco Relocation Appeals Board.
