LEGISLATIVE DIGEST

[Health, Business and Tax Regulations, Public Works Codes - Compact Mobile Food Operation Definitions and Fees]

Ordinance amending the Health and Business and Tax Regulations Codes to revise the definition of a mobile food facility permit and add definitions for compact mobile food operations, mobile support unit, and permitted auxiliary conveyance permits to reflect recent amendments to the California Retail Food Code, and revise existing definitions of various other terms to reflect State law definitions in that Code; establish annual permit and plan check fees for auxiliary conveyance, compact mobile food operation, and mobile support unit permits; and remove annual food facility surcharge fees; amending the Public Works Code to include a definition for compact mobile food operations and to expand the Department of Public Works' street vending authority to include regulation of compact mobile food operations, and require that Department to consult with the Department of Public Health and Fire Department when issuing rules and regulations that regulate street vendors.

Existing Law

Article 8 of the Health Code defines various types of food preparation and service establishments, including Mobile Food Facilities, Commissaries, and Catering operations. But the current law does not include definitions for Compact Mobile Food Operations (CMFOs), Mobile Support Units, or Permitted Auxiliary Conveyances. The Public Works Code regulates mobile food vendors but does not currently define or authorize regulation of CMFOs, nor does it require interdepartmental consultation when issuing rules for street vending.

Amendments to Current Law

This ordinance updates the Health Code by adding new definitions for CMFOs, Mobile Support Units, and Permitted Auxiliary Conveyances, and by categorizing CMFOs into low-, moderate-, and high-risk tiers based on the type of food sold and the level of food preparation involved.

It creates a new Class R for CMFOs, with annual license fees set at $188 for low-risk operations (R-1), $377 for moderate-risk (R-2), $502 for high-risk (R-3), and $188 for permitted auxiliary conveyances (R-4). The ordinance also increases annual license fees for Mobile Food Facilities (Class H) by consolidating five existing categories into two. The fee for MFF 1 would increase from $195 to $893, and the fee for MFF 2 would increase from $292 to $893. A new $781 fee is introduced for Mobile Support Units.

In the Public Works Code, the ordinance adds a definition for CMFOs, expands the Department of Public Works' authority to regulate them, and requires the Department to consult with the Department of Public Health and the Fire Department when issuing rules and regulations for street vendors.

Background Information

The California Legislature amended the California Retail Food Code to formally recognize CMFOs as a distinct category of food facility. These changes were intended to support small-scale food vendors by creating a more accessible and tiered regulatory framework. This ordinance brings San Francisco's local codes into alignment with those state-level changes. This ordinance also modernizes and clarifies definitions and fee structures across the Health Code and Business and Tax Regulations Code. The ordinance is designed to support public health, economic opportunity, and regulatory clarity for vendors and enforcement agencies alike.

SAFETY

How governments strike that balance could be crucial to San Francisco companies and residents. The City has become the epicenter of AI development, home to OpenAI and Anthropic — the two best-funded and most highly valued venture-backed companies in the sector — and numerous other startups. Much of San Francisco’s economic rebound, particularly the gradual filling of vacant office space, is being driven by the AI sector.

At the same time, city residents — and people elsewhere — have had to contend with harm caused by the technology, including AI-related delusions. And some technology experts worry such harm will only get worse, potentially risking catastrophes, such as aiding the development of weapons of mass destruction.

Such large-scale harm is what SB 53 is intended to avert. Although the law, which took effect Jan. 1, has other provisions, it’s mainly focused on transparency, shining a light on what developers are doing — or not — to prevent those dangers.

The measure requires developers of cutting-edge AI models to create and make public a “framework” discussing how they assess whether the systems pose threats of catastrophic risk, the steps they’ve taken to prevent such risks, and whether they’ve had third parties evaluate their risk assessments and mitigation steps.

Under the law, a catastrophic risk is one that could lead to the death or serious injury of more than 50 people, or property damage in excess of $1 billion, thanks to an AI model helping develop or deploy a chemical, biological, radiological or nuclear weapon; the model launching on its own a cyberattack or engaging in a serious crime like murder or theft; or the model evading developer or user control.

The law also requires developers to report to state authorities “critical safety incidents,” such as if a model causes a catastrophe or if deaths or injuries have occurred due to loss of control of an AI system.

SB 53 was the result of a long process that started with the prior year’s Senate Bill 1047, which Wiener also wrote. That bill would have required developers of cutting-edge models to safety test them and would have barred them from releasing models that had an “unreasonable risk” of leading to a catastrophe.

Although the California Legislature overwhelmingly passed SB 1047, it drew widespread opposition from the tech industry, venture investors such as Andreessen Horowitz, and AI researchers such as Stanford’s Fei-Fei Li. Newsom ended up vetoing the bill — but in doing so, he put together an advisory panel that included Li and charged it with making recommendations about AI safety.

CRAIG LEE/THE EXAMINER

State Sen. Scott Wiener spent more than a year working to craft SB 53 and get it enacted after SB 1047, his first AI safety bill, was vetoed.

That panel encouraged the state to focus on transparency, and Wiener — who was not available for comment — made that the centerpiece of SB 53, which won the approval of both the Legislature and Newsom.

The RAISE Act originally started out as something of a hybrid between SB 1047 and SB 53 — it emphasized transparency but also barred developers from releasing unsafe models. New York has a process in which governors essentially make their signing of bills contingent on the legislature agreeing to certain changes to them, and that’s what happened with the RAISE Act.

As amended by Hochul, the bill no longer includes the prohibition on releasing unsafe models and instead has much the same transparency language as SB 53. But unlike the California measure, it creates a new office in the New York’s Department of Financial Services that will have the authority to make additional rules to enhance reporting and transparency requirements. It also requires developers to report critical safety incidents within 72 hours, rather than within 15, as under SB 53.

While he was disappointed that the bar on unsafe models wasn’t included in the final version, New York Assemblymember Alex Bores — the RAISE Act’s author — said he was excited the bill passed and built on SB 53 in “meaningful ways.”

It’s now “the strongest AI safety law in the country,” he said.

“It pierces the myth that states have no role in regulating AI or that SB 53 is the ceiling of what is required,” Bores said.

The passage of the two bills came as the tech industry has been fighting hard against AI regulation, particularly at the state level. Last month, spurred on by tech industry figures, President Donald Trump signed an executive order seeking to block states from enacting laws governing the technology.

Meanwhile, a super PAC backed by Andreessen Horowitz, San Francisco investor Ron Conway and other tech- and venture-industry figures has targeted Bores in particular, aiming to undermine his run for Congress due to his advocacy of the RAISE Act.

In the face of such headwinds, Michael Kleinman — the head of U.S. policy for the Future of Life Institute, an advocacy group that pushes for legislation to protect against large-scale AI risks — said he was “thrilled” to see the RAISE Act pass.

The enactment of SB 53 and the New York bill “shows not only that we can pass AI safety regulation, but that there’s political will and momentum to do so,” Kleinman said.

And those measures might only be the start. Not only are other states working on their own AI transparency bills, some — such as Utah and Nebraska — are including extra provisions in them that are focused on protecting kids.

Those provisions in the Utah and Nebraska bills would require developers to not only disclose how they test for and mitigate catastrophic risks but also — if they offer AI chatbots — risks to child safety. The measures define child-safety risks as those that would, if done by a person, be considered to have recklessly or intentionally caused death, severe emotional distress or injury to a child, including self-harm.

Both Fiefia and Nebraska state Sen. Tanya Storer, the author of Legislative Bill 1083, cited the case of Southern California teen Adam Raine in explaining why they included the child-safety provisions in their bills.

Raine died by suicide in April, allegedly after being talked into it and given instructions by OpenAI’s ChatGPT. Raine is one of several teens and even adults whose suicides were allegedly encouraged by ChatGPT or other chatbots.

Such dangers have led child-advocacy group Common Sense Media to advise parents to not allow their children to use chatbots for companionship or emotional or mental-health support.

“As tragic cases like the death of sixteen-year-old Adam Raine show, damage is being done today,” Storer said in an email. “We cannot afford to make the mistake we made with social media by leaving tech companies to govern themselves.”

Tech-industry representatives remain opposed to state-level regulations and advocate a federal solution. States that overregulate AI could thwart innovation within their borders, said Megan Stokes, state director of the Computer & Communications Industry Association, a trade group. And companies could find it a challenge to comply with different regulations in different states, she said.

“CCIA is incredibly concerned with the possibility of a company being in compliance in one state, which then requires them to be out of compliance in another state,” Stokes said.

But advocates for AI safety legislation said there’s a need for states to step in because Congress hasn’t done so. The idea that other states are building on SB 53 should put to rest the idea that companies will have to contend with conflicting statutes in different states, said Sunny Gandhi, vice president of public affairs at Encode, an AI advocacy group that sponsored Wiener’s measure and is sponsoring Fiefia’s bill in Utah.

Even if the bills vary a bit from state to state, that’s actually a good thing, Fiefia said. States should respond to the needs and concerns of their own citizens, he said.

“This isn’t a ‘one size fits all,’” Fiefia said.

1 Dr. Carlton B. Goodlett Place, Room 244

Dear Ms. Calvillo:

Please find attached a proposed ordinance amending the Health and Business and Tax Regulations Codes to revise the definition of a mobile food facility permit and add a definition for compact mobile food operations, mobile support unit, and permitted auxiliary conveyance permits to reflect recent amendments to the California Retail Food Code. The ordinance would revise existing definitions of various other terms to reflect State definitions in the California Retail Food Code; would establish annual permit and plan check fees for an auxiliary conveyance, compact mobile food operation, and mobile support unit permits; and would remove annual food facility surcharge fees. The ordinance would also amend the Public Works Code to include a definition for compact mobile food operations and expand the Department of Public Works' street vending authority to include regulation of compact mobile food operations.

The following is a list of accompanying documents:

- Ordinance approved as to form
