Raymond Quesada has over 37 years of experience in Project Management/Construction Management and Architecture of which over 20 years has been devoted to airport construction at San Francisco International Airport.

Ray was responsible for the San Francisco International Airport (SFO) Terminal 2/Boarding Area D Renovations (T2/BAD), the first LEED Gold-certified terminal in the United States. Taking over project responsibilities in early 2001, he guided the project from a $50 Million airline relocation project from Terminal 1 to a $250 Million project to consolidate American Air lines operations at SFO, after AA acquired TWA's routes in bankruptcy. The project was put on hold following the events of September 11, 2001. Prior to restarting the current project in late 2007, he worked closely with SFO's Planning Department to determine how T2/BAD work fit into SFO's Long Range Domestic Terminal Redevelopment Program. Initially the current project was to be SFO's Low Cost Carrier Terminal housing Virgin America, Southwest Airlines and jetBlue, but was restructured to house Virgin America and American Airlines about a year after the design-build contract was awarded. The project opened April 14, 2011.

Working with the lead Deputy City Attorney responsible for construction procurement for the City and County of San Francisco, Ray introduced the current design-build procurement method to SFO; first with the Secure Connector project in 2007 and subsequently for T2/BAD.
